Todd and Floyd -

We had a great visit in Memphis last week during which we talked about how exceptions are handled. As part of that discussion, I tried to get at what happens to freight stuck in terminals for whatever reason. After we got past the insistence that the dock is always clear when we close the place, you told us most facilities have "warm rooms" or other enclosed space in which high risk or high value pallets are stored and locked up. For those facilities without warm rooms, the procedure was to move the pallets into a trailer and lock the trailer doors and king pin it to prevent movement. The manager always closes the place, and the manager knows what freight is high risk or high value.

The pictures and string below are provided to let you know how it really works. These 5 pallets were refused by the consignee on Wednesday. The plan below is to store them in this configuration until Monday. I presume this facility is one that will go dark for the weekend, if not each night. This is just less than $1 Million of Schedule 2 and 3 Narcotics. It is protected by a yellow line on the floor and a camera which is not monitored.

Our team engaged with the customer and convinced them to accept delivery today. I would ask that you examine more closely the actual, on-the-ground handling of exceptions versus the procedures you briefed us on.

Thanks for your support.

Ed

Eric,

I have attached pictures of your freight as it is bayed right now. If reconsignment is completed on this shipment today DCU is a 1 day transit time from CMH so the earliest this freight would arrive at Huntsville would be Monday.

Thanks,

Elyse,

Can you please provide pictures of the freight in the secured area. Also, can the freight arrive in Huntsville today? If so, what is the latest we would need to notify you to return the freight? If the freight cannot be delivered today, what is the earliest possible delivery time? I am still trying to work with Cardinal to accept the freight. I have copied the Qualitest team working on this, please respond to all.

Thank you,

Eric Brantley

Eric,

Also I have confirmed if Cardinal will accept this delivery today we can make that happen as well. It's just a matter of Cardinal giving us permission to deliver.

Eric,

I ensure you this shipment is secure at our FedEx freight Facility. All 5 pallets are located in bay 8 on our dock at CMH 10 Commerce Parkway West Jefferson OH 43162 in full camera view. They will remain in this bay until they go out for re delivery on Monday as requested. Cardinal made moon shaped cuts into each pallet leaving ctns exposed. I taped up the cuts in the top of the pallets caused by Cardinal at time of original delivery in order to protect the contents of these pallets. I have a visual at all times of these 5 pallets on my camera system. My security specialist and I inspected these pallets yesterday to confirm nothing was removed from any of the boxes. Cardinal has requested we make no deliveries to there facility today. If you wish to have this freight returned to your facility rather than re deliver on Monday we can absolutely accommodate your wish. We would only require LOA to recon sign back to Huntsville.

Thank you for your assistance,

Ms. Pittser,

This inquiry is regarding the 5 pallets that Cardinal Health refused delivery, PO C024967NLC Tracking # 3594508083. What is the physical location of the pallets at this time? (Address & storage area). What security measures are in place to secure the freight? We are trying to get Cardinal to accept delivery of the pallets today. This is a high priority and we do not want the freight sitting over the weekend at a FedEx facility. If Cardinal refuses delivery, is there any way to return this product to our facility in Huntsville today?

Thank you,
